Young Australian of the Year 2013

AKRAM AZIMI

Akram and his family fled war-torn Afghanistan and received a visa to Australia in 1999. Akram overcame his disadvantaged background and lack of English to become his school's top academic student before studying law at university. Akram was named 2013 Young Australian of the Year for his community service and mentoring work with indigenous youth.

Akram's mother, Nadia, will accompany him to Deep Listening.
We look forward to meeting them and listening to Akram's story.
